

NEW YORKISMS.

From our own Correspondent. New York, Aug. 13. The latest excitement in the city is that occasioned by the arrival at Communipaw of a number of diseased cattle from Illinois.

The latest excitement in the city is that occasioned by the arrival at Communipaw of a number of diseased cattle from Illinois. Nearly 300 head of midding and good Illinois cattle had been sent thither from Homer, in the State of that name, and upon the route had been discovered to be diseased.

More than a dozen of them were thereupon put off at the station of Crestline, Ohio, and before the train reached Communipaw only half the number originally started with, were living.

The butchers and drovers meanwhile displayed a refreshing degree of indifference, and laughed to scorn the doctors' idea that the disease was a malignant form of typhus fever.

Four of the diseased cattle have been placed in quarantine in a separate yard, in order that the symptoms may be carefully watched, and should they die, the work of dissection be performed.

Although medical officers at present carefully abstain from any public announcement of their views, such observations as have hitherto been made indicate that the disease is one of the intensest forms of typhus fever, and not the common murrain.

Meanwhile, almost all of the diseased cattle have been destroyed. The abattoirs yesterday were full of the sound of death-bells, and the sight of reeking blood, as the heavy-spiked axe fell upon the heads of the dumb victims.

latest amours with the elder Demas and the erratic Seaburne are known to all the world, and now that the dark curtain has for ever descended upon that bright and baleful career, the fact that she was large-hearted and generous will of itself be sufficient to secure her mourners among those whom she benighted here in New York.

Mr. Edward Falcon has compiled an immensely simple play, brought out at Wallack's under the auspices of Little Lotta. It was expected that on Monday evening a scene before, as well as behind the footlights would be enacted, in consequence of the report that both Mr. Brougham and Mr. Crabtree had taken out injunctions—the former on the ground that Mr. Moss, treasurer of the theatre, had violated his contract with him, the latter on the ground that Lotta was yet a minor, and had no right to play without her father (Mr. Crabtree's) permission.

Both reports, however, proved to be idle, and the piece passed off smoothly, with the exception of such blurs and blots as inevitably occur on a first night. It is understood that after next season Lester Wallack is to proceed to London, there to undertake the management of a theatre, and that the present Wallack's theatre is to pass into the hands of Barney Williams! Time works wonders indeed.

VENICE. An Unequivocal Watering-Place—Its Romance and its Reality. From our own Correspondent. VENICE, July 28. By this time, I presume, Philadelphia, like London and Paris, is out of town; gone to the watering-places in order, more extravagantly, to enjoy the hot weather.

This place, being abominably hot, the living extremely dear, and the accommodations equal to the worst in America, I was persuaded that it was the city of which I was in search for the usual sea-side rest and recreation. Venice, as a watering-place, is an unequivocal success. There is nothing to hinder a man from bathing on the front doorstep, fishing out of the second-story window.

These liberties must be valuable to Venetians, who live almost entirely on oil and macaroni, which cannot be caught by a hook and line, and who never go in to bathe for fear of washing off the dirt. We arrived in the night, but the moon was not out, nor was the grand canal "beautifully illuminated by the lights of the innumerable palaces."

The gondola was not a fairy boat, nor a wizard skiff, nor anything of that sort, but resembled very much a Down East punt, with a tomahawk nailed on the end, and the gondoliers romantically dressed in red flannel shirts, did not sing "beautiful snatches of Italia's favorite songs," but swore dreadfully. Day hangs over us like a molten cloud, and night comes with chills and fevers.

RITUALISM.

An English Case in Court—Ritualism Gains a Victory. The London Daily News has the following:—The anti-Ritualists of St. Mary, Atherstone, have been worsted in the Archdeacon's Court. Their incumbent has obtained a judgment in his favor, and the churchwardens, the representative body, to pay £100 costs.

Of course this judgment is sound and good, for it is that of Sir R. Phillimore; but it is unfortunate that in contentions with the clergy in the Ecclesiastical Court, parishioners should be so uniformly in the wrong. In this case it is not contended for a moment that the incumbent was in the right; he had acted arbitrarily and illegally, without being proved by his superior, most earnestly, for undoing without authority what he had done without authority, the churchwardens is saddled with the costs of a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court.

The Rev. Mr. Elchings, it appears, fixed, or caused to be fixed, over the communion table of his church an extra ledger or shell, which, in the dialect of his school, is styled a super-altar. This addition to the fittings of the church was made without any faculty, or even the informal consent of the Ordinary having been previously obtained. Sir Robert Phillimore, referring to this fact, said it was to be lamented!

On August last, a vestry meeting was held, when a resolution was passed to the effect that the churchwardens should take steps for removing the super-altar. One of the churchwardens, Mr. Cordingley, understood this resolution to warrant him in removing the shell himself, and accordingly took with him the keys, and after the lock of the church door, after the incumbent had refused to give him the keys, and took the noxious shell away. It is plain that in so acting he violated the law, and for this the incumbent brought him into the Archdeacon's Court, and after what he had heard on Tuesday, it may be predicted that he will not touch a super-altar again.

It will not escape the reader's notice how different is the measure meted to a layman who lays his hands on church furniture to that dealt out to the clergy. Sir R. Phillimore's address, in giving judgment, had all the force and cogency of a judicial decision. The churchwardens of St. Mary Atherstone's the illegal piece of wood in the wrong place; but the Judge spoke of it much as a devout Roman Catholic might be expected to speak of a piece of the wood of the cross. The shell, in which he referred to its removal were such as might properly be applied to any daring and impious act of sacrilege. It is plain that in this case the incumbent and the churchwarden were both wrong together, the difference being that the clergyman was the first to move and set an example of disregard of law. The act of the incumbent, however, is 'lamented' that of the churchwarden is substantially punished.
